Community Resources for California's Seniors

Growing Senior Population is Valuable Resource

California boasts a population of almost 5 million senior citizens. This growing group of active, interested, and experienced people is an important resource to our families, our communities, and our state.

Today's Decision Determines Tomorrow's Outcome

Good nutrition, exercise, and a positive attitude can go a long way towards a healthy lifestyle. To help people over 55 stay fit, live better and remain independent longer, the California Department of Aging has developed a special curriculum of community resource programs and services for California's seniors called "StayWell".

It's a group effort

Working with 33 local Area Agencies on Aging, and many public and private nonprofit agencies, the Department of Aging oversees a broad range of free and Medi-Cal based services designed to help the senior community.

StayWell, Community Resources for California's Seniors, provides Californians over 55 with help to find specific community-based programs and information. Seniors can locate support, guidance, and needed services through many different local community organizations. The services and programs listed on the opposite page are funded by many sources including local, state and federal government. The number and types of services available in each community may vary. Some are administered by the local Area Agency on Aging (AAA) or by other local agencies. These resources provide trained staff to furnish information, assistance, and follow-up to match older persons and their families to specific community services.

Call 1-800-510-2020

The toll-free number connects seniors with the local Area Agency on Aging and the free information and referral service. Many of the local programs and services are also free, however, some are Medi-Cal based programs or fees are charged on a sliding scale based on individual income.
